LATEST TRENDS

The China Fisheries and Seafood Expo took place in Qingdao in early November hosting over 750 exhibitors from 35 different countries, with many companies from China. This exhibition has become the second largest seafood exhibition in the world and an important place for exporters, traders, importers and distributors to meet. This is not surprising as China is by far the world's largest fish producer, processor and exporter. With time China has become also an important importer, both of raw material for its processing industry but increasingly for its rising domestic middle class, which is keen to try out new products using imported, foreign species.

In a seminar during the exhibition, the debate focused on labelling and sustainability in the Chinese market. Despite some recent introductions of eco-labelled products, especially by international retail chains operating in China, the focus of consumers remains squarely on food safety as the overall priority, then price and only third the issue of sustainability.

Although the general sentiment was positive with Chinese production and trade figures setting new records, there are also some clouds on the horizon. Costs are certainly rising with wages up 35% this year, with increasing difficulties for processors to attract enough labour. The cost of energy and water is also increasing. In addition, the appreciation of the Chinese currency is further squeezing margins for processors and exporters. In the longer term, these same factors will make it harder for China to reach its ambitious goals of further increases in aquaculture production, especially as the availability of land and water for aquaculture is decreasing because of urban development. This is likely to indicate higher prices of Chinese products in world markets in the future.

GROUNDFISH

Norway reached a new export record of cod and cod products in October. Sales of codfish, including dried, salted and stockfish totalled EUR 157 million, which represents a 4% increase compared with the same period last year. China is Norway's biggest single importer of white fish, with a total import value of EUR 18 million during October. Cod aquaculture industry exports totalled EUR 3.4 million in value, which represents a 43% drop, although the average price per kilo was up.

Namibia shut down its hake industry during October to allow fish stocks to breed or spawn. The measure is taken to ensure that stocks recover and maintain sustainable levels. Even processing factories are closed.

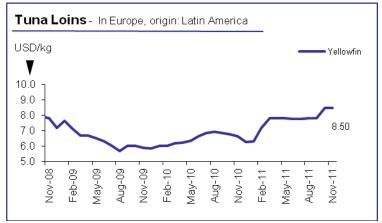

The NMFS has proposed revising the acceptable biological catch (ABC) of the Eastern Bering Sea Alaska pollock stock down to 1.08 million tonnes, which represents a 14% drop compared with this year's ABC of 1.27 million tonnes. NMFS had expected the pollock biomass to grow in 2012 and had anticipated that a total allowable catch of 1.6 million tonnes for 2012 would be possible. However, recent surveys showed that the biomass of pollock has gone down since 2010, and current estimates of young pollock in the region remain uncertain.

One of the leading tuna canneries in Thailand announced the closure of their tuna processing plants in advance of expected flooding. This two week closure will remove a significant volume of potential production from the market and will delay fulfilment of existing contracts. This difficult and unwelcome situation could benefit processors in other parts of the world.

The impact on the tuna raw material prices of the flooding in Thailand remains to be seen. Global demand for canned tuna is not expected to be adversely affected. Demand for canned tuna from Ecuador and other sources may increase as buyers who are facing delays in shipments from Thai producers look elsewhere.

Although catches are good in Ecuador after the ban, the price of skipjack remained firm at USD 1 950/tonne.

The 2nd 2011 closure of the tuna fishery by the Inter American Tropical Tuna Commission (IATTC) commences on 18 November, which will tie up approximately half of the IATTC tuna purse seiner fleet until 18 January 2012. The other half of the fleet observed a closure from 28 July to 28 September.

The Republic of Nauru also announced the closure of its EEZ in the Western and Central Pacific to foreign fishing fleets from 7 November, as the allocation of fishing days as managed by the Parties to the Nauru Agreement (PNA) has been exhausted.

The tuna catch in the Atlantic and Indian Oceans continued to be poor but with prices remaining stable at about EUR 1 100/tonne, and yellowfin 10kg/up at about EUR 1 950/tonne in both Abidjan and the Seychelles.

The cooked loin market remained firm with the major Spanish buyers unable to source significant quantities of attractively priced skipjack loins from Thailand for importation under the 6% import duty quota. In recent years the price of raw material in Bangkok has dipped in the 4th quarter in time for buyers to take advantage of reduced pricing for large purchases of cooked loins against the 6% duty quota. This year the price has not fallen enough to induce purchases from the major buyers. Consequently, the quota is not expected to be filled until well beyond January.

SMALL PELAGICS

Landings of mackerel in Norway remained stable although fish size was smaller than other years. Domestic sales prices for Norwegian mackerel were around 10% higher than in 2010 because of good demand from abroad. Spawning herring catches reached 18 662 tonnes during the second week of November. There are still 110 403 tonnes left to catch from the Norwegian 586 197 tonne herring quota.

In Spain, all the stock of mackerel (Scomber scombrus) had been sold by early November. Prices dropped last month as processors feared they would not sell the remaining stock.

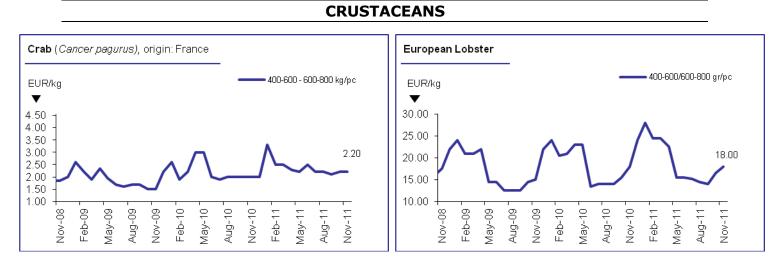

Prices of horse mackerel landed in Northern Europe increased as inventories in importing countries were low. The fishing season for horse mackerel started in early September.

The second anchovy fishing season in Peru starts on 23 November, with a quota of 2.5 million tonnes. There are still 127 000 tonnes left to catch from the current 400 000 tonnes quota in the south, but fishing activities have not been reported yet as the fish is located within restricted areas. Fishing is only allowed outside 5 miles from shore.

Fishing of capelin in Iceland has been affected by heavy weather conditions. Total catches so far are 1 502 tonnes since the season started on 1 October. Catches of spring spawning herring reached 5 709 tonnes in early November, making a total of 136 993 tonnes out of the 148 750 tonne quota. Catches of Icelandic herring were 7 984 tonnes, with the total quota at 46 483 tonnes.

The squid fishing season will start South Africa in again on 23 November. Last season catches were poor but fishermen are hoping for a good start this time. However, despite stock shortage, the European market is showing resistance to price increases. The South African currency is slightly weaker than two or three months easing the situation for ago, exporters.

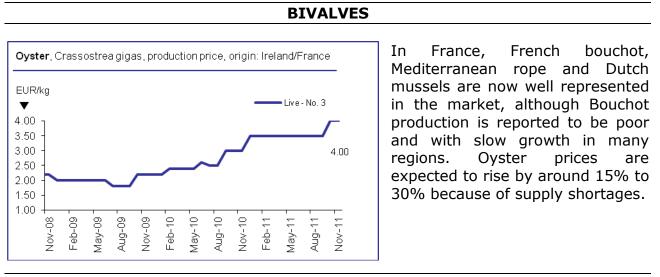

Prices of crab and lobster are increasing as the Christmas season approaches. Demand for new season crab is rising as buyers seek to increase their stocks.

The price of langoustine tails on the market has increased considerably because of poor availability. Prices are up 50% compared with earlier in 2011.

CEPHALOPODS

Shrimp

Viet Nam shrimp exports during the first nine months of the year increased by around 18.5% compared with the same period in 2010. Exports to the main countries of Japan, USA and the EU declined overall compared with the same period last year but exports to China increased considerably.

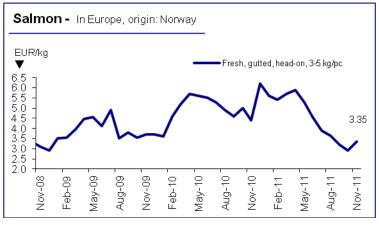

SALMON

The market for Atlantic salmon has finally turned with prices now increasing after the record low levels experienced over the last few months. And what is even more important, the sentiment has also improved with farmers starting to breathe a sigh of relief. Prices remain low, however, and the market can still not be considered to have found a new stable level.

Norway's exporters continue to have problems in both the US and Chinese markets, the first because of the comeback of Chile and the second because of difficulties with import procedures for Norwegian salmon leading to unacceptably long clearing times.

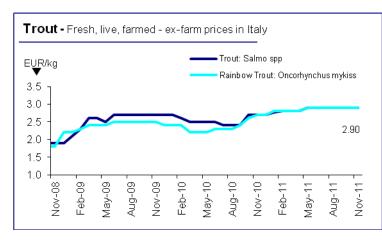

Overall, during the first 10 months of 2011, Norwegian shipments rose 4% from last year to 766 000 tonnes (round weight equivalents). The value declined 3.4% as a result of lower average prices per kilo. The EU market takes two thirds of the total and volumes rose slightly in 2011. Demand in the Russian market has also been good, but the biggest growth was registered for Viet Nam, whose imports went from 5 600 tonnes during the first 10 months of 2010 to 15 100 tonnes this year.

2012 will be a tough year with more supplies from Chile coming to market. At the same time, a slow-down in the world economy will also dampen growth in overall salmon demand.

TROUT

The demand and production of trout in Italy remains stable. Prices are also stable but a slight drop of prices may be expected in the coming months.

Norway's trout exports continue to fall, dropping to 33 900 tonnes at the end of October, although shipments to the EU were up slightly (to 4 700 tonnes this year). Russia remains the major market with Japan, China and various Eastern European destinations as the other important destinations. Prices have been much weaker this year, in tandem with the decline in salmon prices.

FRESHWATER FISH

Importers in Europe are looking for supplies for the Christmas season, but reduced supply of pangasius forced Vietnamese exporters to turn down orders. The reason for the current supply shortage is that many farmers stopped farming earlier in the season to avoid losses because prices at that time were very low and feed costs were high, so that farmers could not make any profit.

The market for bass and bream is rather quiet for the moment. November is usually a slow month for these species and prices have been softening somewhat during November. Prices are expected to increase next month with the large demand boost coming from the run-up to Christmas.
